AQUATONE photographic coverage to date. A general impression was that relatively small areas therein would become available to the United States over and beyond that which it now had photographed if the Soviet Open Sky proposal were adopted. It was also indicated that the 500 mile area west of the line would presumably expose considerable NATO defenses.

3. [redacted] the CIA TSO, informed the Committee that he had disseminated to the members a copy of his annual report reviewing developments relating to the TALENT Security System over the course of the last year. The Chairman invited the members to examine this and to report any errors which they noted.

4. The Committee agreed on additional minor revisions in the draft SOP for [redacted]. Colonel Macia stated that there now remained some staff work for him to do before the SOP could be finalized. It was agreed that the means of finalizing this paper would be the same as applicable as in the case of the SOP for [redacted], and the Chairman stated that he would await word from the Air Force prior to undertaking such action.

He said the form of that transmittal would be the same as in the case of the SOP for [redacted] (Note: Each member is requested to leave word by phone with the Chairman's secretary as to the number of copies his agency wishes by the close of business 1 April 1957.)

7. The Chairman indicated that [redacted] now had the final reproduction of the Western USSR targets and would shortly have those for the Far East. He stated that he would return the Satellite target submissions for such revision as was now required in view of the agreement indicated in paragraph 4 of the draft paper. He requested that those targets to be included in Section A be clearly marked with the letter A and those for Section B clearly marked with the letter B. It was agreed that each of the three lists when distributed would have a cover sheet explaining the categories along the lines of the explanations used in the July 1956 target lists.
